To investigate the significance of genes that are involved in repairing oxidative DNA damage in human cells, we have identified mutant cells from a cell line, G7, that has a defect in the repair of DNA damage produced by the addition of peroxide to the culture medium. Most of the cell lines examined showed a decrease in survival after treatment with peroxide. However, most of the mutant cell lines, obtained from these cell lines, showed no such defect. We have selected for mutant cell lines that have lost both the XRCC1 and ATM genes. One of these mutant cell lines has been found to be resistant to the killing by peroxide due to a defect in repair of oxidative DNA damage. These results indicate that single gene mutation occurs in cells that are defective in the repair of oxidative DNA damage, and that this mutation contributes to the formation of mutagenic lesions.
